

Quick Facts

- Supports research on local people, business, sports, government and more
- Offers 24/7 online access to current and archived local news
- Electronic, full-text edition of record
- Updated daily
- Satisfies student and faculty needs for community information
- Students and faculty can search, browse, print and email articles
- Features an intuitive, user-friendly interface
- Includes Special Reports on key issues

A great resource for course assignments and community awareness

Librarians recognize the value of having eyewitness reporting of issues and events to provide students and faculty with local perspectives that allow them to draw their own conclusions. One of the best ways to offer this information is through the local newspaper. This offers first-hand accounts of local issues related to curriculum topics and community programs. Included are articles about local government, businesses, people, education, the arts and more. In addition, it provides a wealth of information on local events and organizations as opportunities for volunteering and employment. This resource supports general education requirements and core competencies required by all degree-seeking students.

A valuable foundation for every community

NewsBank's electronic edition of your local newspaper provides your campus with up-to-date information and archives in an easy-to-use online resource. With eyewitness reporting, only your local newspaper can satisfy everyone's need for community news. It also provides an authoritative foundation for research on local people, businesses, sports, government and many other topics. From a student studying environmental change to a professor looking for an article published weeks—or even months—ago, online access to newspaper archives benefits the entire community. All NewsBank resources are cross-searchable making it is easy to enhance your collection to include America's News, Access Blogs, Access Newswires, Access Transcripts, Access Business News or Access World News.

Easy-to-use interface

With a NewsBank online subscription, researchers can save time finding just what they're looking for. Students and faculty can easily search, browse, print, save and email articles. With powerful search capabilities and an intuitive interface, they can also track topics over time, pinpoint relevant articles and browse specific dates or sections. Additionally, NewsBank works with libraries to set up, customize and promote use. We offer 24/7 unlimited access both remotely and from all library workstations. Offering economic benefit and convenience, your local newspaper provides researchers with an extensive, relevant record of ongoing issues unmatched by any other media source.

Special Reports to expand your collection

All subscriptions include Special Reports on key issues including health, economics, the environment and more. These unique tools contain news articles, maps, images and other content organized under specific topics and themes. Suggested search terms are included for further research ideas. Easily accessible, they enable students and faculty to quickly locate information on a specific subject while helping them gain better insight into current issues and events.

For more information, contact a NewsBank representative by calling 800.762.8182 or emailing sales@newsbank.com.